REPORTING CONCERNS

We ask questions when something isn't clear or doesn't feel right. We also speak up and report any possible violations of the Code.

It's our responsibility to ask questions when direction is unclear and to challenge and report suspected unethical business conduct, violations of the Code, or breaches of Abbott's policies.

If you're unsure about the right choice or action, talk to your manager or contact the Office of Ethics and Compliance.

Managers and supervisors must lead by example and make sure employees understand and follow the Code. Leaders have a greater responsibility to communicate Abbott's expectations and should reach out to the Office of Ethics and Compliance about any potential Code violations.

All reports of possible Code violations are taken seriously. The Office of Ethics and Compliance will handle follow-up steps, including investigations and corrective actions when needed. You should not investigate on your own. Everyone must cooperate and keep investigations confidential.

Corrective actions may include discipline (up to and including termination) or suspension from work.

AVOIDING CONFLICTS OF INTEREST I

We identify and address conflicts of interest before moving forward.

A conflict of interest happens when personal interests interfere, or appear to interfere, with what's best for Abbott. Business decisions must be based on Abbott's needs, not personal gain or the interests of family or friends. We are expected to use good judgment and avoid situations that could lead to a real or perceived conflict. If personal relationships, interests, or outside activities affect your ability to act fairly and effectively (or could benefit you or a family member), you must disclose the potential conflict and remove yourself from the situation, following Abbott's guidelines.

PROTECTION OF ABBOTT ASSETS & REPUTATION

We are caretakers of our company.

We all share the responsibility to protect and use Abbott's assets wisely. This includes everything from physical items like vehicles and computers, to valuable information such as intellectual property, trade secrets, and specialized knowledge.

We should always use good judgment to make sure these resources are used properly, efficiently, and with care, avoiding loss, theft, misuse, or waste.

Abbott's reputation is one of our most valuable assets, and we all play a role in protecting it.

Each of us is responsible for how we represent Abbott, especially in public settings and online, where anything we share (whether in conversations, emails, or social media) can reflect on the company. It's important to communicate thoughtfully, use good judgment, and protect Abbott's confidential information.

When interacting externally, we should consider whether we might be seen as representing Abbott and how our words or actions could impact its reputation. This is especially important

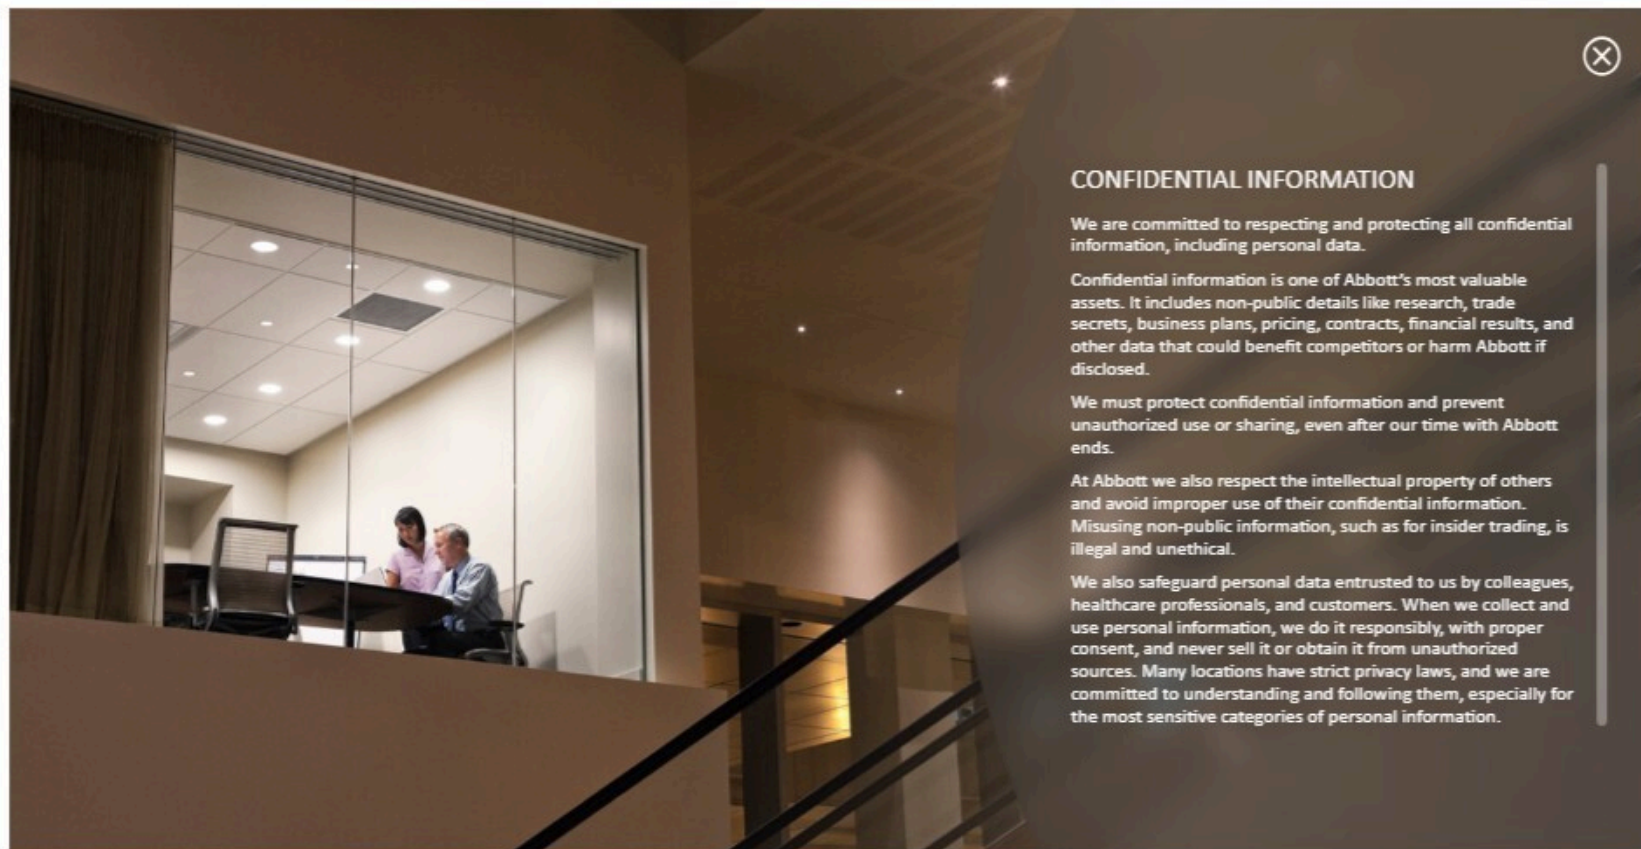

7/8

OUR CODE

How we Operate

CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION

We are committed to respecting and protecting all confidential information, including personal data.

Confidential information is one of Abbott's most valuable assets. It includes non-public details like research, trade secrets, business plans, pricing, contracts, financial results, and other data that could benefit competitors or harm Abbott if disclosed.

We must protect confidential information and prevent unauthorized use or sharing, even after our time with Abbott ends.

At Abbott we also respect the intellectual property of others and avoid improper use of their confidential information. Misusing non-public information, such as for insider trading, is illegal and unethical.

We also safeguard personal data entrusted to us by colleagues, healthcare professionals, and customers. When we collect and use personal information, we do it responsibly, with proper consent, and never sell it or obtain it from unauthorized sources. Many locations have strict privacy laws, and we are committed to understanding and following them, especially for the most sensitive categories of personal information.

ANTI-BRIBERY

We actively oppose fraud, bribery, and corruption. We get business the right way.

As individuals, we expect healthcare professionals to make decisions based on what's best for patients, not influenced by incentives from companies. Likewise, we expect government officials to act in the public's interest, free from corporate pressure.

At Abbott, we educate healthcare professionals about our products but do not interfere with their independent judgment. It is never permissible to offer anything of value to healthcare providers (such as a physician, pharmacist, nurse, researcher or laboratory staff), government officials, or others to gain business or reward past relationships.

We follow anti-bribery, anti-corruption, and anti-kickback laws globally, including the U.S. Foreign Corrupt Practices Act. Everyone at Abbott must carefully manage relationships with service providers, such as distributors, consultants, and speakers, by conducting due diligence, paying fair market value, and properly documenting payments to ensure compliance with laws and company standards.

8/8

OUR CODE

How we Operate

8/8

GIFTS, MEALS & ENTERTAINMENT

We do not offer or provide anything of value to gain a business advantage, directly or indirectly, in line with anti-bribery principles.

To prevent improper influence in business decisions, we set limits surrounding gifts, meals, and entertainment. Abbott's policies help ensure that brand reminders, cultural courtesies, hospitality, and other benefits never interfere with professional judgment.

8/8

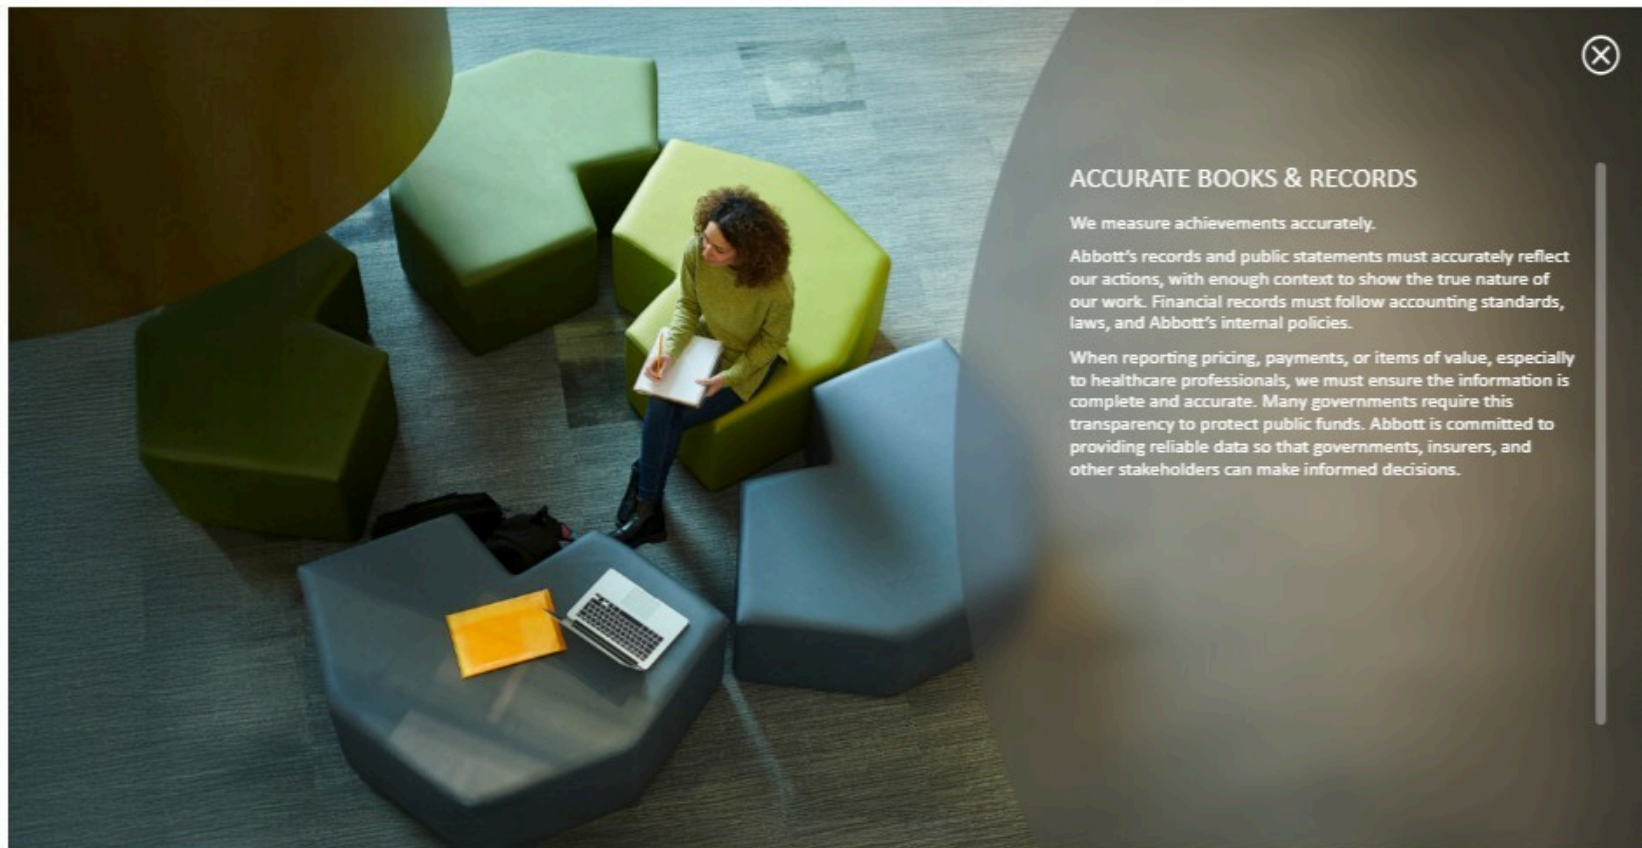

OUR CODE

How we Operate

8/8

ACCURATE BOOKS & RECORDS

We measure achievements accurately.

Abbott's records and public statements must accurately reflect our actions, with enough context to show the true nature of our work. Financial records must follow accounting standards, laws, and Abbott's internal policies.

When reporting pricing, payments, or items of value, especially to healthcare professionals, we must ensure the information is complete and accurate. Many governments require this transparency to protect public funds. Abbott is committed to providing reliable data so that governments, insurers, and other stakeholders can make informed decisions.

8/8

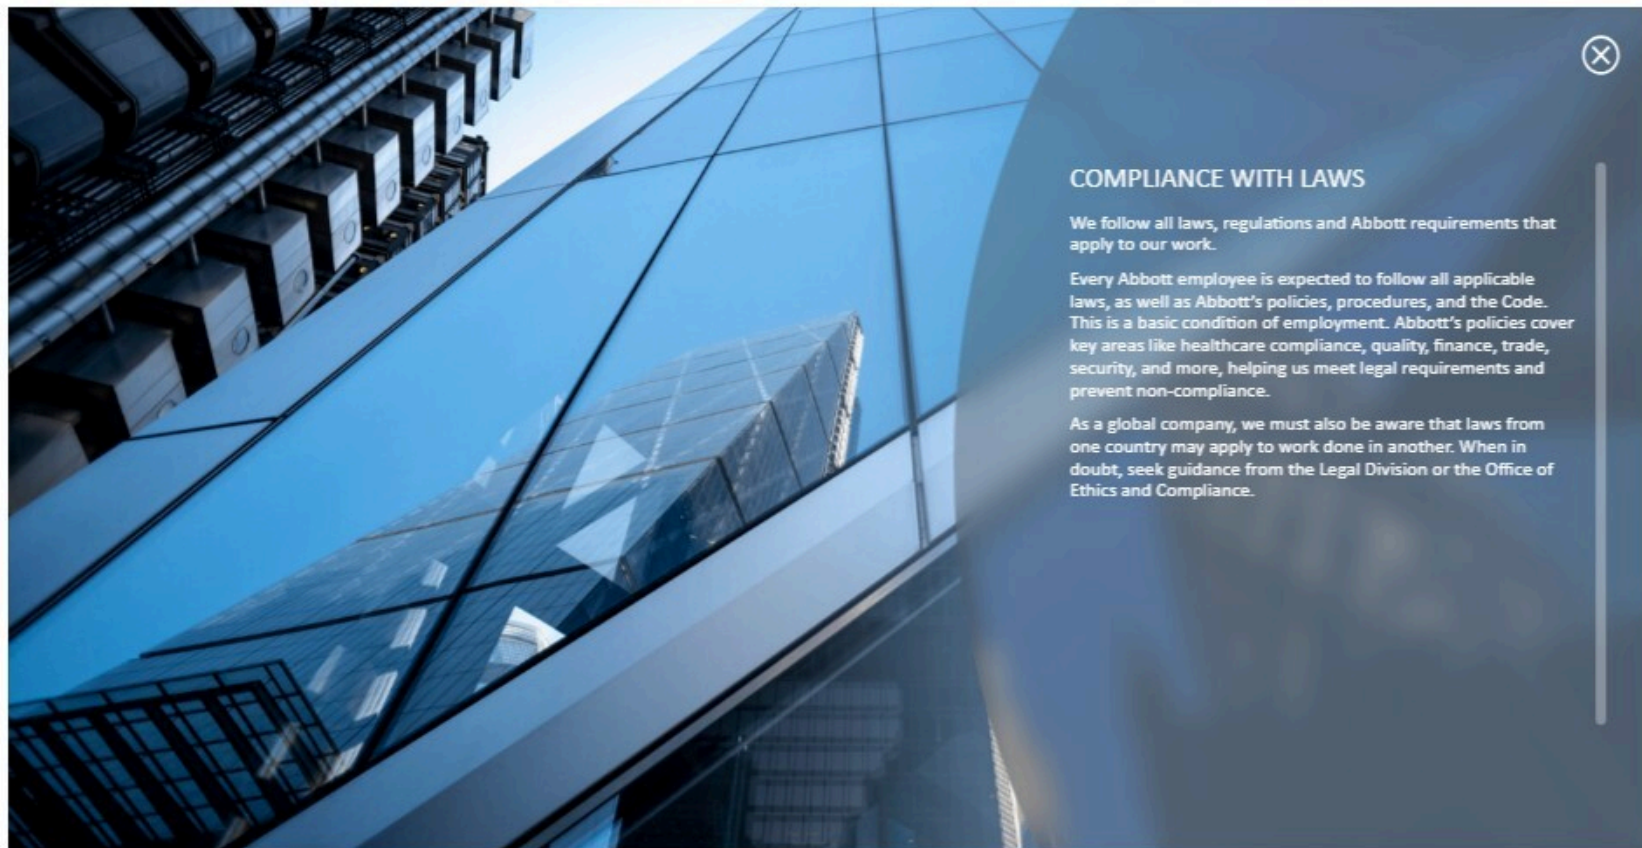

OUR CODE

How we Operate

8/8

COMPLIANCE WITH LAWS

We follow all laws, regulations and Abbott requirements that apply to our work.

Every Abbott employee is expected to follow all applicable laws, as well as Abbott's policies, procedures, and the Code. This is a basic condition of employment. Abbott's policies cover key areas like healthcare compliance, quality, finance, trade, security, and more, helping us meet legal requirements and prevent non-compliance.

As a global company, we must also be aware that laws from one country may apply to work done in another. When in doubt, seek guidance from the Legal Division or the Office of Ethics and Compliance.

8/8

OUR CODE

How we Operate

8/8

FAIR COMPETITION

We ensure that any interactions that we have with competitors are appropriate.

At Abbott we are committed to following competition laws everywhere we operate. These laws prohibit agreements or actions that discourage fair market practices, especially in pricing, sales terms, and interactions with competitors.

Avoid discussing sensitive topics (such as pricing, costs, or business plans) with competitors, and reach out to Legal or the Office of Ethics and Compliance if you have questions or encounter anything inappropriate. Because competition laws are complex and violations can carry serious penalties, we must also carefully manage relationships with third parties to ensure compliance and avoid even the appearance of anti-competitive behavior.

You are working in an affiliate where it is allowed to sponsor HCPs to attend educational conferences. You are in the process of selecting HCPs to attend a conference. The criteria that you use for selection include: (1) whether the topic of the conference falls within the HCP's area of expertise; (2) whether Abbott has sponsored the HCP in the past year; and (3) whether the HCP is likely to recommend Abbott products or utilize Abbott devices after attending the event. Are these criteria appropriate?

- 1 | Yes. The two key criteria that must always be met when sponsoring individuals are that the sponsorship: a) is relevant to the HCP's area of expertise, and b) is not being used as a reward or inducement for business. The fact that you are checking to make sure that Abbott has not sponsored the HCP in the past year helps to ensure the latter.
- 2 | Yes. As long as the reason for sponsoring the HCP is not to influence or reward the individual, you are able to consider the return on your investment – whether or not the individual will continue to prescribe Abbott products.
- 3 | No. Sponsorship decisions may not be based on the factor that the HCP is likely to recommend Abbott products or utilize Abbott devices after attending a sponsored event.
- 4 | Yes. As long as at least one of the criteria is appropriate, the presence of additional inappropriate criteria is not relevant.
